

I oppose the idea of fixed pricing of electricity, as a consumer who has always tried to keep my energy usage low, not just to save money, but to help the environment.

This is just another money grab from greedy middle men corporations, who should never been allowed to take control of a state owned and operated asset. If you are looking for a way to recoup generation costs, may I suggest, returning the administration of power distribution to the state, who's share holders are the customers, not some profit driven overseas fat cat investors.

I for one, have the where withal to sever my connection to the grid as I previously stated I have always been frugal with my energy usage so my solar and battery, can and has carried me over the winter months, and wouldn't think twice about disconnecting.

This proposal will disproportionately affect those who can least afford to pay a fixed supply price, how do you expect people on a low income, living payday to payday on a very tight budget rationing their power usage to make ends meet, suddenly pay for power they didn't use.
